Stockbridge Racecourse ~ the Last Ten Years

 1889 - 1898

"Let the racing be good or bad, what man is there who, having once experienced the indefinable charm of Stockbridge, does not long to go there again? For there you can SEE as you can nowhere else......Stroll on the course and take up your place, where you will, either within or without the enclosure, there is so much space, and such is the conformation of the ground, that from the fall of the flag, you shall behold, not, as is usually the case, your neighbour's hat, or the fringe of a lady's parasol, but every change and incident of the contest to the final struggle out of the treacherous dip to the winning post."

The Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News 19 June, 1886

In the 1940's a small boy in North London was listening to an interview on the radio. The boy was me and the only part I can remember was the speaker's warmth when talking of Stockbridge racecourse. There was such affection in the reminiscence, such a nostalgia, that the words stuck with me over the years.

In 1974 a work of romantic fiction was published and it stimulated me to find out much more [I had accumulated some photographs and press cuttings] and I embarked on a voyage that has introduced me to some wonderful characters, wonderful horses, and stories, many of which I am sad to say have no basis in fact.

The story of the racecourse is mixed with the Day and Cannon families. In 1793 the first John Day [of a number of 'John Days'] moved to Stockbridge and began training. Much has been written about the Days, most of which would have led to defamation proceedings had it been penned in their lifetimes. They made a highly successful business out of training and selling horses though at times their finances were at a low ebb. The jockey and trainer Tom Cannon married into the family.

At first racing was on the 'lower course' but in 1830 it was moved to the north and incorporated a 'straight mile' - in fact the course had a severe 'elbow' - and the first Grandstand was erected. The Bibury Club moved its races there in 1831, a coup by John Day II.

The course had a number of eras. The Bentinck: Lord George Bentinck, a sad and unprincipled man, had his horses trained at Stockbridge and maintained a breeding establishment there before a falling out with John Day. Bentinck moved his horses to Goodwood. This was followed by the 'Danebury Confederacy' a motley crew led by ex pugilist John Gully MP. The moves of the Confederacy were so concealed and devious one wonders if they knew what they were up to half the time. Then came the 'Hastings' Era', when the Fourth [and last] Marquis had his horses trained there, though unfortunately, not with his interests in mind for much of the time. It was an age of huge wagering. Hastings died aged 26 in 1868, robbed, deceived and humiliated by those to whom he had given help, friendship and trust. [See my Stockbridge Racecourse - the Hastings' Era.]

During the Bentinck and Hastings times there were as many as 100 horses in the Days' care. There were considerably fewer after 1868. The meetings benefited from the large equine population because, in part, people were not inclined to travel their horses to Stockbridge as the handicapping was said 'to favour the home side'.

In 1867 a stand designed by John Francis Clark for the use of Bibury Club members and their guests was opened. A few walls of the stand remain today and that is all of the racecourse that exists Rumours of the course's closure came in 1897. Marianne Vaudrey, who possessed the freehold of half the course, declined to renew the lease in 1898 because of her disapproval of racing. At a stroke racing was deprived of its loveliest and most stylish course and the people of Stockbridge of much income and employment. Although many by the 1890's took the train from London for each day's racing many more still made a week of it renting villas and cottages in the neighbourhood.

I had hoped to publish details of every race run at Stockbridge from the mid 1770's, but sadly it will be up to others to look at my notes and research at the Hampshire Record Office and finish the task. This snapshot of the last ten years will, I hope bring some insight of the old course and aid researchers down the years.

A word of thanks to the un-named and unknown scribes who daily compiled the returns of racing in the age of the telegraph, and Mary whose level headed encouragement over a number of years has been invaluable.
